DENTIST

from the Times-Dispatch of the 20th inst. The land books of Buchanan county were padded, that the auditor in his annual report made especial note of the situation . . . the practice of adding land which actually never existed, but which appeared on the deeds, was presumably for the purpose of selling some of the property to capitalist, began some years ago, and continued until after the commissioners tried to make money by adding them to the assessments. The Commissioners of the Revenue of this county are good and brave men, brave and courageous, and discharge their duties without fear or favor, having only one object in view, to endeavor to follow the law to the letter. No man can be fairly charged that they "padded" their books for the purpose of increasing their fees, or that they placed this land on their books so that they might get their share of the tax money. It is wrong to put a simple fee on the charge to the least, is a gross libel, founded on a misstatement of facts and those who made them should use every effort

As yet the commissioners of this county have not been instructed by either the auditor or attorney-general to leave this land off.

SOUTH BOSTON

[Special to the Times-Dispatch.]

South Boston, Va., January 13.—An enjoyable banquet was given by Halloway and Sons, 38, Halloway street, to the members of the local chapter of the Masons, on Monday evening, in honor of its members and invited guests, this and, you would be in deadly peril a hundred times over.

And she thinks with delight of Monsieur Ernest's strong hand which it will be so nice to hold in her own to avert the success, which she would avoid by the precipice and cross the river.

A hundred times she has been told: "My dear little girl, must you know everybody and everything," and as a result her life is a constant dread. Like the young swallows sitting in the nest, she waits for the moment watching the moment when they may slip away, she is living in fear and expectation, never daring to express an opinion, never daring to say that she enjoys the reading of a really good book, nor the masterpieces of art, nor takes any interest in anything but her life. "Let me listen to the music of the world, even if it makes me cry," nor tear the bangles from her eyes and say: "Give me light, beautiful golden warm light, which my twenty years are yearning for."

The young girl that were brought up by our grandmothers, who were timid, bashful, but ready to take up the fortunate. This is why they are active, energetic and brave.

They build no castles, either in air or in Spain, and if their imagination is rather vivid, they do not complain when they are disappointed. With their little hands they tackle reality, they are not hugging for the sake of happiness which is reached only through work.

They are a little too free and easy in manner, sometimes scare old maids, who have remained faithful to the ideal of the young girl "comme il faut," and they are not afraid to disagree with their own ideas. But, yet even that the modern young girl will be one of the most marvelous flowers of the twentieth century.
